The David Dows- The only 5 Masted Schooner to Sail on the Great Lakes

Did you know the museum has a model of the David Dows, the only 5 masted schooner to sail on the Great Lakes? The David Dows, built in Toledo, Ohio in 1881 was prized to be, at the time, the largest schooner built on the Great Lakes. However, its massive size was also its Achilles's heel, leading to a short lived career.

The schooner was officially recorded to be 265- feet-long and required a harbor depth of over 25 feet. This kept it out of most of the harbors on the Great Lakes and required offshore loading and unloading. Its size also made it hard to maneuver. Tragically, the Dows often rammed into other schooners, leading to the deaths of a handful of sailors.

Later, the David Dows was converted in to a barge but sank in 1889 near 95th street while carrying coal in a storm. Today, the location of the wreckage is a popular dive spot. The museum has one of its huge anchors in storage at Crowley's Yacht Yard and the model of the David Dows incorporates the coal that it was carrying on the day of the wreckage.
